STEVENSON, ALA.

One of the most healthful and picturesque locations in the country. At the junction of two of the most important railroads of the South—the Memphis and Charleston and the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis—with two other roads projected and to be built in the near future, it has unrivaled facilities, both for procuring the raw material and for distribution of the manufactured product. It is in the heart of the

Most Important Colliery District

Of the Country, not excepting even Birmingham, and has an abundance of iron ore within easy reach; with the surrounding mountain sides covered with valuable timber, and with a bountiful supply of water, there would seem to be nothing lacking to insure the building up at this favored point of a large manufacturing city; and to insure this the company stand ready to donate ground to and take stock in any manufacturing enterprise that may locate there.
